Sustaining High Performance

Alex Hill, Co-Founder and Director, Centre for High Performance

Alex is an Associate Fellow at Oxford University (UK), Associate Professor at Kingston University (UK), Educator at Duke Corporate Education (US) and Visiting Professor at Cass Business School (UK), Gordon Institute of Business Science (South Africa), The Academy of National Economy (Russia) and KEDGE Management School (France) where he teaches on a variety of postgraduate and executive programmes.

The world renowned Thinkers50 placed him on their list of 30 management thinkers most likely to shape how future organisations are managed and led, and his research has been widely discussed in the media by the BBC, Daily Mail, Economist, Forbes, Guardian, Huffington Post, Independent, Schools Week, Spectator, Telegraph and Times.

The Centre for High Performance, of which he is Co-Founder, is a collaboration between faculties from the Universities of Oxford, Kingston, Duke CE and London Business School to help high-performing organisations develop a stronger and more robust UK economy, society and environment. Over the past four years, the Centre has worked with a wide range of high-performing arts, education, military, service, sport and technology organisations.
